OIL AGAIN FLOWING THROUGH PIPELINE

88,541 gallons salvaged; agencies plan long cleanup

Oil gushed through a repaired trans-Alaska oil pipeline Sunday morning, sparing the state millions of dollars in losses in oil-related taxes but leaving nearly 200,000 gallons of crude for workers to clean up.

Oil companies were told they could pump at full levels through the 800-mile line at 7 a.m., nearly three days after a man shot a hole in it, spewing 285,600 gallons of crude.

Phillips Alaska Inc. was pumping oil to full capacity within 12 hours, a spokeswoman said. BP Exploration (Alaska) Inc. officials expected to be at a similar level by 7 p.m. Sunday. Those and other oil companies form the consortium Alyeska Pipeline Service Co, which operates the pipeline between Prudhoe Bay and Valdez.

For their honeymoon, the couple briefly stayed at Sheep Mountain Lodge, then drove down the Alaska Highway to Seattle to their new home.
